WASHINGTON (Reuters) - Tensions between North and South Korea heightened on Friday as Pyongyang condemned U.S. and South Korean military exercises and said it was rethinking nuclear negotiations. The North's official Korean Central News Agency said North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Su Yong had sent a letter to U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and President Donald Trump, in which he questioned whether the United States would stick to its commitment to "dialogue." Ri said the North was willing to start dialogue as long as Washington removed the deployment of a U.S. missile defense system in South Korea. "We do not know why the U.S. is being stubborn in dialogue despite our repeated requests," the KCNA report quoted Ri as saying. "We will seriously reflect on the dialogue we are holding with the United States if the U.S. side does not show sincere intentions for dialogue." In the letter, Ri wrote to Pompeo that the U.S. side had been insisting on "unilateral and unjustified demands," when it needed to show "flexibility and an open mind" in order to move forward on the dialogue. "It is a real concern if the United States, a repeat offender of the issue of denuclearization of the Korean peninsula, will unilaterally start a new provocation that will never be the solution to the nuclear issue and will deteriorate the situation," he said. The letter came a day after South Korean newspaper Chosun Ilbo reported that North Korean state media had warned of a possible collapse of the denuclearization process that began under 77a5ca646e
